Love of Home Indicated.

The selfish propensities, while strong, are dominated by better instincts, and the back of the head shows a love of home and a strong regard for family ties.

Lips Are Sensual.

The lips are full, sensual and red, the upper lip projecting over the lower, a sign of an affectionate and generous disposition.

The line of enquire formed by the lips is without comprehension. It indicates a calm, tranquil and dispassionate

Forehead Undeveloped.

The forehead is undeveloped and curved above the eyebrows, rather a childish trait and one that has not been straightened out by understanding and reflection.

The eyebrows are rather heavy and dark and nearly straight. They are wide apart at the nose, showing lack of intelligence, and rather vulgar nature.

The eyes are the opposite of the active and alert eyes. They are unusually large, showing a tendency to be far from normal.

The nose is full and hangs low,

almost touching the eye lashes, indicating a sensual tendency.

The eye opening is rather long and narrow, indicating a rather suspicious nature in direct contradiction to the eyes.

Most faces, however, present numerous variations from the weak and feeble type of one feature is frequently balanced by the strength or normality of another, as in this case.

Open, Honest Eyes.

The eyes themselves are blue, frank and full, honest looking—they meet one's gaze unflinchingly—nothing secretive about them.

The eyes are not unsympathetic, they are expressive only in an elementary way. They are the eyes of a rather inert but well-behaved child and appear to have been affected by the physical or moral condition under which the boy grew up and which usually exerts such a marked influence upon the look of the face.

There is nothing furtive or shifty in

John Voepel's gaze. I can't say I find the expression of his eyes, strictly speaking, ingenuous or winning, but it is only just to say there is not a sign of treachery or brutality in them.

The nose is good, exhibiting rather intelectual and very well modeled straight, not timid or weak, but of the peace-loving type. It lacks fighting attributes and indicates a great commercial genius, but it is better looking than the average nose by far.
